BURGOYNE WAS JEALOUS.

HIS FRENCH WIFE WAS KISSED BY HER BROTHER-IN-LAW THRICE.

Six weeks of housekeeping and the jealousies of her husband were the themes on which Louise Burgoyne gave evidence before Justice Ingraham of the Supreme Court yesterday, with a pleasing French accent, in her action for a separation dinster of differences in the Twenty-third ward or the Central Gas Company of Harlem. She had left the family of Whitelaw Reid at White Plains with the regret of the family in ber, 1893, to marry Burgoyne. She is chaps 25 years old.

She complained that her husband had given her no chance to show her abilities as a houseseper, as he was a niggardly provider, and that was constantly accusing her of infidelity. deleben, the husband of one of her sisters. and that she had been intimate with the ship's physician on the steamer Noordland on their return to this country after their honeymoon They took passage for Europe Sept. 27, 1803, the day after their marriage. Ex-Judge Ernest

Hall asked her:
"Didn't Mr. Bardeleben throw his arms about rou up stairs immediately after the marriage on

"Eet is absolutelee false," she replied with trong emphasis as she set a bottle of smelling alts on the Judge's deek, which she thereafter ed from time to time during the examination. "Wasn't Mr. Bardeleben in the habit of kiss ing you?" persisted Mr. Hall.

"Ah, nawn; eet's absurd," she replied.
"Has he ever kissed you?" again asked Mr. Tree times. Once when we were married," said, "once when we were going to Europe

d once when we get back." She denied speaking in French with her friends when her husband, who cannot speak French. ras about. She said that in Paris her husbane ade her walk as much as ten miles rather an take a cab, which costs only 35 cents. They took a run out from Paris one day on a ain, and before all the other passengers in leir compartment her husband had accused to dirting with the male passengers opposite

"He talked so loud and made such dreadful testures," she said. "Eet was a pairfect shame." On the Noordland, she was going to the fleek with another woman, and the ship's doctor met them at the head of the stairs. The women tood conversing with him a moment, when Burgoyne appeared. Burgoyne remarked:
"Don't you think I saw your glances at the floctor?" He got into a fury, and almost shouted at the physician to keep away from his wife. She told her husband he must apologize to the doctor, and be told her not to dare to speak another word to the doctor. She, however, went to the doctor and be told her not to dare to speak another word to the doctor. She, however, went to the doctor and be told her not to dare to speak another word to the doctor. She, however, went to the doctor and apologized for her husband. Mr. Hall wanted to know why she had done that she was forbidden to do, and she said:
"Why shouldn't I do eet, Mistaire Hall?"

Then they got to the housekeeping. Burgoyne had taken rooms for her at 53! Trinity avenue, which he furnished quite well, she said, except in the kitchen. She had not had any experience at getting meals, but she had made tea and coffee and was confident of her theoretical knowledge of cooking in general. The only pots and pans she had were a large pot, a frying pan, and a bread pan. The first three weeks of their housekeeping Burgoyne would go out and get provisions in the morning and would usually make the fire. She got the meals. The last three weeks he took his meals away from home and he had some provisions sent to her. He didn't get any vegretables except potatoes after the first week. He wouldn't get peas. He said they were too dear. He carried in the coal and took out the ashes. She had berged him in vain to let her have money to do her own marketing.

When she saked him for butter he told her that she said to that and she replied:

went for her husband. It she had not interfered Bardeleben would have struck her husband. Amo Bardeleben testified that he called at the Burgoyne house on Nov. 13, 1893, and Burgoyne said to him: "How do you do?" To which he replied: "How do you do?" be damned. How do you flow do you do?' be damned. How do you dare say that I have been intimate with your wife."

"You are not the only one," said Burgoyne.
Bardeleben denounced him. He also told of the episode when he had called Burgoyne a cur and a coward. Mrs. Hardeleben testified that her faith in the innocent relations of her husband and her sister was not shaken, and that her sister is now living with her. The case went over until to-day.

SHOCKS FROM TROLLEY WIRES. Brooklyn Linemen Swear that They Have Not Been Harmed by Them.

The suit of John Byrnes against the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Company for $10,000 damages for an alleged electric shock and consequent injuries, was tried yesterday in the City Court in Brooklyn, and the jury will bring in a sealed verdict this morning. While the plain-tiff was driving in a sand cart on Oct. 13, 1893, a trolley wire broke and fell on his shoulder. He declares that he has never fully recovered from the shock which he got.

Witnesses for the company testified that it would have been impossible, while Byrnes was standing on the wooden floor of his cart, for him to have received such a shock as he described. There was no danger, they said, in taking hold of a line of trolley wire under such circumstances. The maximum voltage when the electricity left the power house was 500, and it steadily diminished.

Lineman Thomas Banks swore that he often handled the live trolley wires without gloves and got shocks. He described these as merely alight tingling sensations similar to that of a galvanto battery. Foreman Oliver G. Stack testified:

testified:
"I have reason to believe that I took the entire voltage of the Atlantic avenue system resterday. I got it by making what the men call a 'jumper' of myself. We were putting in a section of wire and I picked up two ends, one live and one dead. I got the full charge. The best way I can describe the sensation is to say it is like an arm asleep."

Had Her Landlady Arrested.

Madeline Shirley, a concert hall singer, appeared in the Jefferson Market Police Court yes-terday as complainant against her landlady, Mrs. Mary J. Taylor of 211 West Thirty-fourth street, whom she accused of illegally withholding her trunks. The singer owed Mrs. Taylor a large board bill, and when she returned from taking a walk on Wednesday afternoon she found her room dismantled and her effects looked up in another room. Miss Shirley made a complaint of burglary against Mrs. Taylor, who was locked up in the West Thirty-seventh street police station house all Wednesday night.

night.

Mrs. Taylor said yesterday that she had locked the things up because she was afraid the singer would go away without paying her. Justice Woorhs decided that no burglary had been committed and discharged Mrs. Taylor, after advising her to put the trunks back in Miss Shiriey's room.

$200 for Part of an Ear.

Robert Roberts's suit against the Consolidated Traction Company was tried in the First District Civil Court in Jersey City yesterday. Rob-erts was driving a spirited young horse through immit avenue last November. A trolley car sapproaching, and the horse began to prance soberts held up his hand as a signal to the motorman to stop until he could get across the tracks, but the motorman clanged his song, put is more power, and made such a racket that the norse became unmanageable and ran away. Roberts was thrown out, and had a part of one ear torn off. The buggy was wreeked. The jury gave Roberts $200.

FIREMEN'S TOURNAMENT.

Gain Day in Newburgh-Twenty Thou sand Strangers in the City.

NEWBURGH, Oct. 18.-The second day of the tournament of the Newburgh Firemen's Asso-ciation attracted not less than 20,000 strangers to the city. The steamers Mary Powell and James W. Baldwin brought a big crowd from Kingston, including several of her crack com-panies. The big steamer D. S. Miller and the many trains on either side of the river brought the Poughkeepsie firemen and their friends, to the number of 3,000 or more. The steamers Belle Horton and Emiline ran an excursion up the river, and every incoming train was packed In the throng were many prominent people. his post to take part. Supervisor-at-Large rope of his old company here, Washington Engine No. 4. Gen, M. Hodges of Haverstraw came up, and ex-Congressman M. D. Stivers and his political friend, Mayor Stansbury of Middletown, were on hand, as were John W. Vroman of Herkimer, Jacob Hess of New York, and George W. Anderson, President, and William H. Boyd, Secretary, of the Veteran Firemen's Association of New York. Every city within fifty miles seemed to send nearly all of its chief and assistant engineers, and every village a large quota of its prominent firemen and citizens.

The procession has never been excelled along the Hudson River. There were thirty-three organizations and nearly as many bands in line. A feature in the line was the old "white shost truck of Chelsea Hook and Ladder Company No. 2 of the Volunteer Fire Department of New York. A banner on it to-day said it was the "original" and was used by Chelsea in 1782, It has been run by Brewster Hook and Ladder Company of this city for over forty years, and was only discarded last year. The Chelseas of Nyack assisted some of the old members of the New York organization to draw the truck in the parade to-day. The procession from the balcony of the new City Hall.

New Jersey Synod Declares the General

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 18 .- In the New Jersey Presbyterian Synod to-day a commission of fif plaint of the Rev. Dr. Charles D. Haley over the ction of the Newark Presbytery in adopting a resolution implying that the Presbytery did not Assembly was binding upon the Church. The resolution was incidental to discussion of features of the Briggs case. The Commission unanimously sustained the Haley complaint, so far as it refers to Newark Presbytery's informing its members that General Assembly's judicial decisions are binding upon the Church, "unless and until reversed by a subsequent Assembly." The Commission held that the words quoted ought not to have been adopted by the Presbytery, as an Assembly cannot reverse a judicial decision of a previous Assembly, all a judicial decision of a previous Assembly, all jurisdiction ceasing with the dissolving of the Assembly which tries the case.

The report further declared: "With regard to the matter of doctrinal declaration or deliverance, the Commission adjudges that the General Assembly is the highest judiciary in the Church, and its interpretation of the doctrines of the Confession of Faith are to be received with the obedience due to the body, but such deliverances become law only when approved by the General Assembly in the regular and constitutional manner, or when embedied and set forth in a judicial decision by the Assembly. The doctrine of inerrancy declarations by the General Assembly, which deciarations prompted the Newark Presbytery to adopt the paper complained against, is now the law of the Church, having been judicially settled in the Briggs case, and is, therefore, binding upon every minister and eider of the Presbyterian Church."

After a long discussion the report of the Commission was adopted by a small majority.

ROBBER AND INCENDIARY. Mr. Baldwin's Colored Coachman Makes a Clean Breast of His Wickedness.

FLUSHING, L. I., Oct. 18.-John P. Williams and Thomas Bass, colored, who were arrested yesterday by Detectives Sarvis and Slavin for robbing and then burning the home of Mr. Henry W. Baldwin in this village on Oct. 9. were to-day taken around among the pawn shops in New York and Long Island City. Mr. Baldwin and his son Percy accompanied the de-tectives and their prisoners. Mr. Baldwin iden-tified property, worth in all about $3,000. which had been stolen from his home. The prisoners were arraigned here before Judge Smith this morning. Both pleaded guilty to the charge of grand larceny, and each accused the other of setting fire to the house. Williams, who was formerly Mr. Baldwin's coachman, waived examination and asked to be taken before the amination and asked to be taken before the Grand Jury. Bass did likewise.

In the afternoon Williams asked to be taken to the court room, and, unsolicited, wrote the following confession, which he swore to before Notary Public Luke J. Connerton, in the presence of Detectives Edward A. Slavin and James W. Sarvis?

"I John P. Williams, hereby exonerate Thomas Hass from setting fire to the house of Henry W. Baldwin. I did it myself."

Several years ago Williams presented an organ to the colored church here. The gift was accepted, although it was well known that Williams could ill afford such an extravagant expenditure. Since that time he had been regarded as a pillar of the church, and it had no more regular and apparently devout attendant. He was also a Sunday school teacher and leader of the colored band.

Detectives Slavin and Sarvis will get $1,000 from the Hoard of Underwriters, $500 from Mr. Baldwin, and $500 from the village.

CANADA'S COAST INDIANS. QUEER CHARACTERISTICS OF THE SIWASH RED MEN.

Folk-lore-Their Story of the Creation - Tribal Stories at the Potlatches.

From the Toronto Globe. VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 8,-Slwash is a name which has been made generally applicable to all of the west coast Indians from Pugnt Sound to Alaska. These Indians are divided into a great number of tribes, differing in language manners, and modern traditions, though in their older traditions there is such a striking similarity as to indicate beyond a doubt that they have sprung from a common source. If one were to attempt to trace the origin of these tribes he would find that apparently the country now occupied by them had in other days been peopled by an older and in all probability an inferior by an older and in all probability an inferior race, with whom the ancestors of the present generation had mingled; but at a point on the Queen Charlotte Islands there is a line beyond which the older tribes had evidently come into contact with a later and superior infusion.

Among the Hidas on the Queen Charlotte Islands is found a fine race of men. In their physical make-up they are large and powerfully built; they are somewhat lighter in color than their southern neighbors and more intelligent; their mythology is more complicated, but more carefully wrought out, and they excel in their arts of wood working and carving. Coming south from the Queen Charlotte group it is built: they are somewhat lighter in color than their southern neighbors and more intelligent; their mythology is more complicated, but more carefully wrought out, and they excel in their arts of wood working and carving. Coming south from the Queen Charlotte group it is found that the influence of the older and inferior race is more and more strongly impressed upon the tribes, and a gradual deterioration continues, with a few interruptions, right down to Vancouver Island, where a very ordinary type of aborigine is found. From all that can be traced in their mythology, in their peculiar methods of thought, and, in some instances, in their tribal traditions, it is reasonable to suppose that the ancestors of the Hidas drifted across the Pacific Ocean, most probably from Japan, and found lodgment on the islands now occupied by their descendants. These involuntary invaders had found an interior class of natives, with whom they had commingied until the distinction between them had been obliterated and a new tribe had been formed. That this supposition is probably the correct one is shown by the fact that within comparatively recent times Japanese vessels have been blown out of their course and drifted upon the North American coast. That the Queen Charlotte group has not been the only harbor of refuge for these storm-tossed mariners of old is probable, for among some of the tribes further south, even down as far as the powerful Bella Coolas, there are found evidences of superiority which can only be attributed to a commingling of the Japanese, though with intermediate weaknesses between these points and points north and south, showing that they had received a fresh infusion from without at particular places. In the seventies a Japanese into Victoria harbor. Words similar in pronunciation and meaning are found in the Japanese and tribul languages, and there is a striking similarity in the physical outline of the two peoples.

The religion of these tribes, if it can be dignified by such a name, is polythelatic in its ch

Alce-Mes-Sa-la-Nik, the supreme uelty of the tribe, gathered together material for the creation of the universe, and amused himself by piling it into a large heap. When it had assumed proportions suitable to his ideas of such things he endeavored to reduce it to a proper and convenient form. The undertaking, however, proved more difficult than he had expected, for the substance with which he was wrestling was of such an ethereal character that, powerful as he was, he could not control it. In his dilemma Coos, the Raven God, happened along, and observing the perplexity of Mes-Mes-Sa-la-Nik inquired of him the cause. The difficulty was explained, whereupon the Raven proffered his aid, stipulating, however, that in return for the service that he should render he should have the honor of having his image carved on the totem pole of the first man to be created. The bargain was made. Coos unfolded his wings and, placing himself over the chaotic mass that had baffled the deity, fanned it so vigorously that it took on the desired form. Then Mes-Mes-Sa-la-Nik went ahead with his creative work. But he had not proceeded far when another difficulty confronted him. He had apportioned his creation into land and water, but the moment that he let go of the land down it would drop to the bottom of the sea. He spent days and days fishing it up, but all his work was in vain, for no sooner had he relinquished his hold upon it than down it would go again. Like the hero in the melodrama, Coos turned up when his assistance was most needed. He suggested all scrits of wild and improbable plans for surmounting the difficulty, and amused himself by watching Mes-Mes-sa-la-Nik try them all in vain. After a number of humorous remarks calculated to try the temper even of a deity. Coos undertook to find a solution of the difficulty, in return for which he was to receive control for one day of the Nok-Nok or magical power possessed by Mes-Mes-sa-la-Nik.

If you ask an Indian for an explanation of any unusual or apparently supernatural occurren

One end of this he fastened to the earth, while he threw the other end over the moon, hauled taut and made fast, thus bringing the earth to the surface of the water and maintaining it in that resition.

Mes-mes-sa-la-Nik was happy again, and he proceeded with his great work. He created man and woman, and the first man, according to agreement, carved a toten pole with Coos on the top, and took the wily raven as his patron saint. The totem poles of the west coast indians are made of large sticks of timber, from $25 to 30 feet in length, and from two to four feet in thickness. On one of these is carved the creat of the family to which it belongs, the creat of the family of the wife of the man to which it belongs, the creat of the family of the wife of the manches of the man's family; and it also has inscribed upon it representations of animals illustrative of the peculiar features of the mythological history of his family. Each man has what is known as a totem story, an outline of which is carved on his totem pole. The totem story is an account of the origin and of the more or less wonderfulthings that happened in the early history of his family; and it is depicted in hieroglyphics that can be interpreted only by its owner. The story is the exclusive property of the owner, and must have be related by any one else. The family history in the form of the totem story is transmitted from father to son.

Time went on, and Mes-mes-sa-la-Nik's children increased and multiplied they forgot to pay proper epoet to their creator. Ho had failen into disrepute among them. The raven had become very popular, for he was withal a pleasant and specious deity. Mes-mes-sa-la-Nik naturally grew lealous. One day the people assembled at a hig potlatch, an affair resembling somewhat he noble institution of the clambake. When the company had foregathered they began to sink into the sea, and down, down, down the son, had bound about the earth.

The result was that the carth immediately began to sink into the sea, and down, down, down it wen

This may appear to be a very amusing story,

During the winter season, when the natives are prevented by stress of weather from fishing or hunting, they assemble at their potlatches, or feasts, and exemplify these traditions by various dances. They array themselves in the rious dances. They array themselves in the most grotesque costumes, put on wooden masks illustrative of the delites whose characters they assume, and work out their tribal stories in pantomime. What the Charity Ball is to the Four Hundred, these events are to these simple children of nature. The origin of a tribe, the acquisition of tools and weapons, the discovery of the uses of implements, have each a legend richin Oriental imagery, strong in crude coloring, and for every one there is a particular dance. These are sufficient in number to occupy nearly the whole of the winter months.

TRENTON'S NEW BISHOP

Many Distinguished Preintes at His Conse eration Yesterday.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 18.-The Rev. James A. McFaul was to-day consecrated as Bishop of Frenton to succeed the late Hishop O'Farrell. The consecration took place in St. Mary's Cathedral. The services began promptly at 10:30 A. M., when over two hundred visiting priests marched in procession from the episcopal residence to seats reserved for them in the cathedral. It was just i o'clock when Bishop McFaul, having received the mitre, gloves, and Bishop's ring, went down the sisle of the church, bestowing his blessing on the congregation. Archbishops Ryan of Philadelphia and Chapelle of Santa Fé, Bishops McQuaid of Rochester and McDonnell of Brooklyn were present. Hishop Burke of Albany preached the sermon, which followed a short intermission after the consecration. Others present were Hishops Tierney of Hartford, McGoldrick of Duluth, Donaghue of Wheeling, McGovern of Harrisburg, Hennessy of Wichita, Ryan of Burfalo, Goleriets of Ogdensburg, Fitzgerald of Little Rock, and Conroy of New York; Vicar-Generals McNamara of Brooklyn, Kennedy of Syracuse, and Swift of Albany, and Mgr. Doane of Newark. McFaul, having received the mitre, gloves, and syracuse, and Switt of Albany, and Jigr. Poane of Newark.

There were about 300 priests in attendance, and many prominent citizens, who were invited by the new Bishop. The Rev. William J. Fitzgerald of Lambertville was general master of ceremonies, and the Rev. James N. Connolly of New York was master of ceremonies to Archishop Corrigan. The ceremony was the first of the kind in Trenton, Bishop O'Farrell having been consecrated in New York city. The large cathedral was crowded, and hundreds stood in the street unable to gain admission. This afternoon Bishop O'Farrell entertained the visiting clergy and the priests of his diocese at dinner, and celebrated vespers in the cathedral.

Mrs. Jane McArthur, a young woman of 283 Pavonia avenue, Jersey City, while passing along Henderson street on Wednesday night was seized by a strange man, who threw his arms around her and began to hug and kiss her. She made a vigorous resistance, and in the struggle her dress was torn off. Her screams were heard by a policeman, who arrested her assailant. He said he was Alexander Fetchil. In Police Justice Potts's court yesterday Mrs. McArthur was not desirous of pressing the charge, but her husband was, and Justice Potts fined the prisoner $10.
